Nutritional bioactives are compounds found in the diet that have biological effects. Certain nutritional bioactives have been studied for their specific action in certain physiological conditions.

A normal inflammatory response and activation of inflammasome protects the host from infection or prevents further tissue damage. However, prolonged dysregulated inflammasome activities have been associated with development of immune and metabolic disorders. Nutritional bioactives may provide a safer approach in addressing the harmful effects associated with dysregulated inflammation and inflammasome activation.
